

Offers: Produce vendor Sells fruit and vegetables	Offers: Juice vendor Sells traditional drinks.	Offers: Cloth vendor Display of traditional clothes and flags in a fashionable and contemporary way.	Offers: Jewelry vendor Representation of culture through different stones and gems sourced directly from Mexico.	Offers: Food vendor Authentic traditional comfort food in a place far from home.	Offers: Workshop for Vendors Her father is able to teach how to build a vendor cart.	Offers: Shaved Ice Vendor Offers seasonal and traditional handmade flavors.

Needs: This vendor needs a customized cart, as well as a nearby sale point where they can buy products that run out during the day.	Needs: This vendor needs a water station, daycare for their kids as well as a better cart with shelves and a refrigerator for ice instead of a cooler.	Needs: This vendor needs a customized cart or additional objects that help them to display their wares.	Needs: These vendors need additional storage for tools and wares that are not in use at their stand.	Needs: This vendor expressed a need for daycare for their kids. Also needs a easily taken apart cart and nearby storage.	Needs: The vendors need a nearby repair shop for either quick or long-time cart fixing.	Needs: This vendor needs a cold storage for ice blocks. Each week she pays $100 for a truck delivery.

Where do our vendors come from? Where do they source their wares? In East Harlem this has been an everchanging answer. As we researched historical records and spoke with some vendors we began to piece together a tapestry of interweaving records of connected routes of trade and culture. We identified seemingly simple products such as shaved ice (or raspados, icees, piraguas, frio frios, granizadas...) being named by a almost infinite list of names and even with entirely new flavors developed on the streets of East Harlem.

the vendors of 116th st are always one or two steps from an emergency. there are some organizations that do their best to help. we would like to join them in these efforts.

PRECARITY